

First Nations Voices: Wisdom, Experience, Knowledge

There is much debate on the topic of Global Warming and whether it is real. Sarah James will be visiting our campus with three members from the Arctic Village. Sarah James will speak about how global warming has affected the Arctic Village community; moreover, touching on the social and community cost of taking no action. Sarah James has been a voice for Indigenous rights. From her home in the Arctic Village, Alaska, the northernmost Native village in the United States she has dedicated over 10 years advocating for environmental and social justice. She is a Gwich'in Indian leader, fighting to prevent oil drilling in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge.

Wednesday, April 11, 2007 12:00 Noon – Cultural Presentation by the Gwich'in Nation
Where: Satellite Student Union – Free Admission

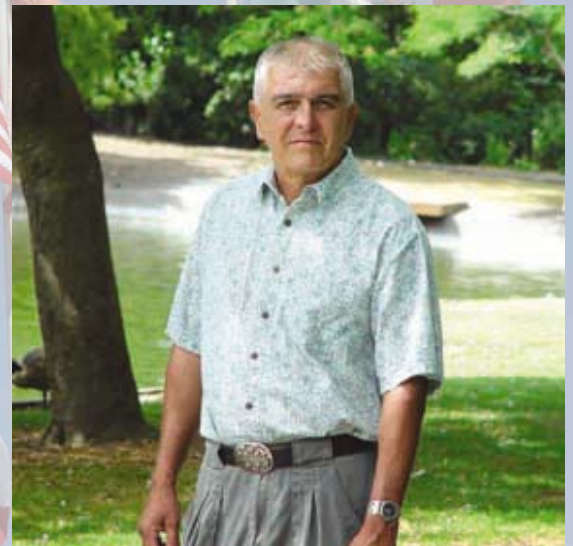

Global Warming Panel & Edward Castillo

Thursday April 12, 2007 5:30-6:30 pm Sarah James 6:45-7:30 pm Edward Castillo

Where: Satellite Student Union - Free Admission

Parking will be relaxed
in Lots O, P & J

Edward Castillo finds that many students enter college with limited understanding regarding California Indian history. He will illuminate the California Indians' viewpoint and experience. His work includes a teacher's guide for public schools; in addition, he hopes it will show children and raise the social consciousness of our community to understand the experiences of American Indians. Castillo is the Chair for Native American Studies at Sonoma State University. A Cahuilla-Luiseño Indian, his specialty is in California Indian Ethno-History and authored numerous books and articles and teaches subject courses dealing with American Indian history and culture.

Sponsored by:

The Division of Student Affairs, College of Social Sciences,
Central Valley Institute for Regional and Historical Studies,
First Nations Student Organization