Background

Competitive Student Research and Creative Activities Support Awards in amounts up to $1,000 are made in support of the quality scholarship of graduate/doctoral student research and creative activities associated with the thesis/dissertation* or project requirement. Since the fall of 1990, support grant proposals have resulted in awards totaling over $385,000.

- previous recipients of the award

Thesis and Dissertation are used interchangeably in this document*

Purpose

The purpose of this award is to encourage, support, and recognize graduate/doctoral student research and creative activities associated with the thesis/dissertation or project requirement in any academic area. These awards are also intended to expand the opportunity for students to engage more fully in their work and thus achieve excellence for themselves, their programs, and the Division of Graduate Studies. In addition, the process involved in submitting an application for this award is meant to be a valuable learning experience for graduate students who may later be required to submit similar applications as doctoral candidates or as professionals. Inclusion of this award on resumes has generally fostered additional recognition as a special honor.

Amount of Awards

All awards for the fall or spring semester in the amounts up to $1,000 are paid directly to the individual applicant. If you receive an award, but for some reason you cannot carry out the planned research, you are required to return the award to the Division of Graduate Studies.

Note: Recipients of this award who are currently receiving financial aid are subject to having the amount of this award factored into their current budget by the Financial Aid Office, with the possibility of reducing the amount of another award or loan.

Selection Criteria

Graduate Student Research and Creative Activities Support Awards are made by the Graduate Dean based upon the recommendation of a review committee approved by the University Graduate Committee. The chief considerations in determining whether a student's submission will be awarded are the support, clarity, and quality of the proposal (see below). Because this award is given to recognize individual effort, joint student proposals will not be considered for funding. Support from this fund must be acknowledged in subsequent publications or presentations of the work.
