

Online Teacher Credential?

Meeting a Need: Teacher Shortage!

Online and Digital learning has been growing exponentially. In particular, institutions both public and private, are offering online teacher preparation programs. The Kremen School of Education & Human Development is looking to create high quality programs within the Online and Digital space. Bringing already high quality, inclusive teacher preparation programs to a larger group of teacher candidates.

Universal Design for Learning goes Digital

Online and digital programs should be prepared to both serve a diverse learning population, and welcome this diversity to education.

To accomplish inclusion, online and digital programs must provide:

- Options for robust engagement to empower purposeful, motivated learners.
- Options for representation of content to encourage resourceful, knowledgeable learners.
- Options for learners through action and expression to demonstrate strategic goal-directed learners.

FRESNO STATE
Kremen School of Education and Human Development

Meeting a Need: Inclusive Education

Online and Digital education must be accessible to a wide variety of learners. As teacher education programs prepare candidates to serve increasingly diverse students, these programs must also aggressively welcome a diversity of teacher candidates by providing opportunities for success.

Poster developed by: Kimberly Coy, Ph.D.