

Building Bridges to Care

Tragically, minority women are twice as likely to die from breast cancer. The Central Valley Health Policy Institute at Fresno State, led by Dr. John Capitman, is working to change that. The institute is the driving force behind the research and development of the Breast Cancer Navigator Program.

The effort offers culturally tailored assistance to women throughout the diagnosis and treatment process, identifying resources to improve quality of care and exploring insurance challenges. The commitment is to ensure women complete their care.

Fresno State is creating a healthier valley through research, producing nurses and other health professionals, and maintaining regional health data. Now that's a positive trend.

FRESNO STATE
POWERING THE NEW CALIFORNIA

More information at www.FresnoStateNews.com

On Campus

Friday, Oct. 26 - 6 p.m.
Football vs. Boise State
Bulldog Stadium

Saturday, Oct. 27 - 7 a.m.
Susan G. Komen
Race for the Cure
Campuswide

Fresno State honors
Caroline Williams
assistant director,
International Student
Services and Programs
cancer survivor,
10 years