

Learning Lessons from Life

Fresno State psychology professor Robert Levine requires students to take an active role in their learning, helping him earn the 2007 Outstanding Teacher of the Year Award from the Western Psychological Association.

He sends students anywhere from refugee organizations and homeless shelters to sales seminars and used-car lots to experience social psychology firsthand. Then they apply concepts taught in the classroom to make sense of what they observed.

Dr. Levine is known internationally as an innovative teacher, who also has written four books and numerous research articles. He is an example of Fresno State professors who bring learning to life.
