

Designing & Building the Future

In the next decade, 85 percent of California's growth will happen in the Central Valley. That makes Fresno State's Center for Construction Excellence a vital resource.

Dr. Suzanne Kehde, a lecturer in the College of Engineering, trains students to join management staff on a number of important building projects in the Central Valley and the state, including hospitals, schools, and rapid transit and water treatment facilities.

With more than 95 percent of construction management students offered jobs before graduating, Fresno State is building foundations for the future.
