

Leaders Changing Lives

Nonprofit organizations play a vital role in areas ranging from education and health care to the arts and job training. Dr. Matthew Jendian directs Fresno State's American Humanics program, training students to strengthen and lead charitable organizations.

Fresno State challenges students to tackle today's most pressing social issues through bold and innovative thinking. To prepare, they work with hundreds of nonprofits in the Central Valley to learn leadership skills that will benefit us all.

American Humanics graduates are on a career path to making a good living while making a difference in the lives of others.
