DISSERTATION

Discourse and Complex Implementation: Military Base Conversions in Texas. This work utilized administrative discourse theory to analyze the reactions of local governments in the aftermath of military base closure. Case studies focused on both elements of success and failure at strategic planning for the purpose of replacing lost jobs and income.

ADMINISTRATIVE EXPERIENCE

California State University, Fresno

- Spring, 2007— Co-Coordinator, American Indian Studies Program. Duties include; recruiting, retaining and advising students, teaching new or redesigned classes on indigenous culture, politics, law, and tribal self-governance. Also currently engaged in outreach, collaboration and grant writing activities with local reservations and Rancherias in and around California's central San Joaquin Valley.
- Fall, 2006— Consultative Committee on Public Administration, Dept. of Political Science. Authored outcome assessments and alumni surveys for the MPA program's NASPAA re-accreditation effort, and the undergraduate Public Administration major, to comply with University and WASC accreditation requirements. Also authored alumni surveys for the department's undergraduate Political Science major and graduate program in International Relations. Helped design new course for the off-campus MPA programs.

University of Arkansas

- 2002-2005. Advisor, University of Arkansas Bachelor's of Science in Public Administration (BSPA) degree program. Duties included; recruiting, retaining and advising students, supervising student internships in political and administrative offices throughout the state and in Washington, DC, scheduling classes in consultation with other public administration faculty. Grew the BSPA major from 11 students to 44 in two years. Completely redesigned the curricula for the BSPA major, reducing it from 72 hours down to a more manageable 36, including new course offerings. Authored departmental policy on hiring, mentoring and evaluating graduate assistants who taught independent introductory sections for the major. Supervised graduate assistants in the MPA, MA in Political Science, and Public Policy Ph.D. programs. Served as acting Department Chair on an as-needed basis, advising students, meeting with parents, and attending chairs' meetings with the dean of the college. Designed and updated the BSPA website on a regular basis. Authored departmental guidelines on how to handle workplace violence in response to several on-campus incidents. Collaborated on grants and a Homeland Security guest speaker series.

Southeastern Louisiana University

- 1999-2001. Internship and Service Learning in Political Science Coordinator. Created and implemented a new program for political internships. Recruited, selected, supervised and conducted performance evaluations for student interns assigned to political or administrative offices, including state and local government, and elected officials from Louisiana in Washington, DC. Designed a website on Service Learning for the Political Internship program. Supervised about 12 student interns per year.
